

China as a major power: challenge or opportunity?

This two-day program explores challenges and opportunities arising from China as a major geopolitical actor. It considers current aspects of China's development, worldview and outlook, including key economic drivers, political dynamics, social challenges, defence priorities and aspirations, technical innovation, internal security challenges, strategic objectives. The implications of these factors for Australian interests and national security, and that of the region more broadly will be critically considered.

This program is designed for anyone who would benefit from a deeper understanding of China as it pertains to Australia's national security and national interests. There is no minimum security clearance requirement.

Past presenters for this program include: Professor Richard Rigby, Associate Professor Jane Golley, Associate Professor Michael Clarke and others.

"I really enjoyed the course, and found it to be highly relevant to my work area. The course coordinators made efforts throughout the two days to ensure that the course was tailored to the group's interests as conveyed through our questions. I would recommend this course to anyone whose job touches on the Australia-China interaction in a national security setting."
