

Terrorism and Foreign Interference: tackling concurrent threats

While the Australian government continues to support a range of key Counter Terrorism (CT) and Countering Violent Extremism (CVE) initiatives as part of its national security agenda, Foreign Interference (FI) has been identified as a significant threat with the rise of new technologies and evolving geopolitical agendas.

Against a backdrop of a number of recent cases of interference, how does the government respond with finite resources and competing priorities? How will the government ensure it correctly balances CT efforts with anti-FI initiatives to protect Australia's sovereignty and integrity? What lessons from the counter terrorism effort can be applied in tackling foreign interference? This two-day program will explore these challenges in detail and offer practical guidance for national security professionals and policymakers.
